Janice Muñiz is an experienced integral coach who has been working with CEO's, entrepreneurs, heads of start-ups and community leaders in the U.S. and Latin America for over 15 years.

She has coached in a wide range of industries and has collaborated with companies experiencing rapid growth, undergoing management crises, and still others going through mergers and acquisitions. One of her specialties has been to help large and complex organizations develop their top talent. A partial list of clients include Microsoft, Pepsico, Booz, LVMH, AON, Viacom, Natura, Cisco, Veracyte, and Bepensa among others.

Janice's clients report that she creates a space of trust, where they feel supported, seen and understood and where they are guided through a developmental path that enables them to understand the patterns that might be limiting their potential, so that they can live from a place of higher self-awareness and be more effective in attaining what they are looking for.

Janice is an integral coaching graduate of New Ventures West and holds the PCC ICF Certification. For over a decade, she was a faculty member of this school, supporting the development of coaches on their path to certification.

Prior to becoming a coach, Janice headed multinational marketing communication firms for WPP. Here, she enjoyed assignments that challenged her with turning around companies that were in financial and operational upheaval. This experience, coupled with leadership positions at J. Walter Thompson, provide her with a unique understanding of the corporate and individual pressures leaders face on a daily basis. As a speaker, she participated in various corporate events including Expo-Management and WOBI's Leaders Forum.

Janice coaches in English and Spanish. Since early in her life, she has been fascinated with the fields of business, leadership, creativity and spiritual development. She is currently a student and teacher in training of the Diamond Approach. She also loves dancing, music and enjoys travel, photography, and trekking. Janice currently lives in Austin, Texas.
